4	I do not think that too much water is wasted in Japan, and I will give two reasons to support this opinion. To begin with, people these days care more about protecting the environment than they used to. Many of them have learned that it is important not to waste water. In addition, today's technology helps to save water. For example, some modern buildings collect rainwater to use for various things, such as watering flowers and plants. For these two reasons, I do not think too much water is wasted in Japan.
