4	I do not believe Japanese companies should make their workers take English lessons. First, there are many different types of companies. At most companies, there is no reason for employees to speak English because all of the customers speak only Japanese. In addition, it would be very expensive for companies to pay for their workers to take English lessons. In today's economy, many companies cannot afford to do this. Therefore, in closing, I do not think that it would be a good idea for Japanese companies to make their workers take English lessons.
