4	I disagree that Japanese schools should start their school year in September. Firstly, it would be difficult for schools to start their school year in another season. For example, changing school events, such as entrance and graduation ceremonies, would require support from teachers, parents, and the community. Secondly, spring events at schools have become a part of Japanese culture. For instance, many people cannot imagine entering school without thinking of cherry blossoms, which are a popular symbol of spring. Therefore, I disagree that schools should start their school year in September.
