Changing jobs regularly is an overall benefit for workers because there are clear advantages in terms of career goals and working conditions.

Firstly, changing jobs is one of the best ways for workers to achieve their career goals. A worker's chances of promotion or broadening their work duties depend heavily on the company, so staying in one job can limit their career progression. Switching jobs allows people to explore different employment opportunities, which can positively impact their career development.

Secondly, moving to a new company exposes workers to a variety of working conditions. Some companies may expect their employees to follow strict rules, which can cause workers to feel stressed. Changing jobs, however, allows workers to experience better working conditions and improve their well-being.

Therefore, considering career goals and positive experiences gained through various working conditions, changing jobs is beneficial for workers.
