4 I do not think local governments should help people learn how to use the Internet. First, there are already enough opportunities for people to learn these skills. For example, many companies offer computer classes, and there are a lot of books about using the Internet. Second, it will cost local governments too much money to teach people how to use the Internet. There are many other things that local governments should spend money on, such as healthcare and preparing for natural disasters. Therefore, I do not believe that local governments should help people learn how to use the Internet.
