I think railroads should not be closed even if they only have a small number of passengers. First, the lives of people living along the railroad will become inconvenient. They rely on trains to go to school or work every day. If railroads are closed, it may be harder to go to such places. Second, these railroads often have historical value. Their trains and stations are attractive to people interested in railroads, and this could bring tourism to local communities. Therefore, railroads with a small number of passengers should not be closed.
