4	Some Japanese companies use English as their official language. This policy has benefits because it allows employees to share ideas with international offices and helps hire skilled workers from abroad. However, it can cause stress for staff who are uncomfortable communicating in English, and providing language training requires a large investment of time and money.
5	I think this is a good idea. First, it helps customers make healthier food choices in their daily lives. When customers can see the number of calories, they can choose dishes that fit their dietary needs more easily and avoid eating too much. Second, it shows that restaurants have a sense of responsibility. By providing this information, they can be honest about their products, which helps them build trust with customers. Therefore, I think it is a good idea for restaurants to show information about calories on their menus.
